ABSOLUTELY PURE

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 12, 1894.

"Silver Dollar Bland," as many people call the gentleman from Missouri, who is Chairman of the House Committee on Coinage, is about the happiest man in Congress. His bill for the coinage of the silver dollar in the Treasury is going to be passed by the House, notwithstanding the stubborn effort made by the anti-silver men to defeat it or destroy its effect by amending it. The opponents of the bill say the Administration is opposed to it and that Mr. Cleveland will veto it if it passes, but its friends point out the fact that Secretary Carlisle has gone down the river on a pleasure trip, knowing that the bill would be passed by the House before his return, and say that if the Administration was opposed to it, Secretary Carlisle would have remained here in order to use his influence against it. There are reasons for believing that Secretary Carlisle is personally in favor of the bill, and that President Cleveland is personally opposed to it. Still it may not be vetoed, because it may be accepted by Mr. Cleveland as a bar to free coinage, for several years to come at least, as it will keep the mints busy.

The most notable thing about the silver discussion in the House has been the alacrity displayed by many of those who voted for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Silver Law to put themselves on record as favoring the Bland Bill. Of course the fact that Congressional elections are to be held this year may have had nothing to do with this, but it is a queer coincidence that these gentlemen all represent districts known to be strong in silver sentiment. Speaker Crisp took occasion early in the contest to record himself in favor of the bill. There is another thing connected with this bill which has caused comment. As soon as it became apparent that the bill would pass Representative Bailey of Ohio moved to show any disposition to press his resolution declaring it to be the opinion of the House that the Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to use the money for the sale of bonds for any other purpose than that specially defined in the act for the redemption of specie payment, and now it is stated that his resolution will not be voted upon at all, although it has been favorably reported to the House. This does not necessarily mean that a compromise has been made under which the resolution is to be dropped in return for the Secretary's keeping his hands off the Bland Bill, but there are people who place that construction upon it.

The majority of the Senate Finance Committee will certainly not be chargeable with any unnecessary delay if their present tariff programme be carried out, by reporting the amended tariff bill to the Senate this week. It is stated, unofficially of course, that a duty is to be placed on sugar and coal, and that a number of other changes which will make the bill get the votes of all the Democratic Senators have been agreed upon. The income tax is not to be disturbed by the committee.

The Moody and Sankey meetings are attracting more local attention than Congress. They are held in Convention Hall, which seats about 6,000 people, but every night it has been necessary to hold overflow meetings in nearby churches. The meetings began last week and are to continue for four weeks. A monster choir of 1,500 voices leads the singing, which is grand as well as sublime. As the Romans used to say, "The voice of the people is the voice of God."

Members of the House Judiciary Committee seem to be afraid of the resolution of Representative McGinn of Illinois providing for an investigation of the conduct of Judge Jenkins, in order to ascertain whether or not there are sufficient grounds for his impeachment in connection with the injunction he issued concerning the right of certain labor organizations to strike. The resolution was referred to a sub-committee consisting of Boatner of Ark., and W. A. Stone of Pa., but the sub-committee reported back that it could not agree and asked that the full committee decide what should be done. This the full committee declines to do. So the sub-committee will again try to decide what ought to be done with the resolution.

Somebody is going to strike a snag when it comes to asking for a big appropriation for printing the speeches that were delivered at the various World's Fair Congresses. It has just come to the ears of the members of the House Committee on Appropriations that ex-Congressman Butterworth, who is engaged in editing the aforesaid speeches, expects an appropriation of about a quarter of a million dollars to pay for printing them. He will have to exercise a lot of legislative shrewdness to get one-tenth of that sum for such a purpose, if the talk of those who will have to pass on the appropriation counts for anything.

The Radel Monument.

This is without doubt the most magnificent monument in this State. It was built by Powers & McGowan, the monument sculptors of South Orange Avenue, Newark, and like all the rest of their work is entirely creditable to them. The monument is 35 feet high, rising from a base 8 feet square and 2 feet high. It is of Vermont granite, the statuary being of Western statuary granite. The lower part of the monument consists of a series of handsomely carved pilasters, tapering off in artistic gradations to the statue cap, which is 3 feet square and 3 feet high. Upon this rests the statue of St. John Nepomucene. The figure is of heroic size, and represents that martyred priest in full vestments. The pose is life-like and the features noble. The head is bent slightly forward, the saint gazing with devotion at a cross held in the right hand. The left hand hangs gracefully at the side and holds the martyr's palm. The work on this figure is of the highest order of sculpture; the calm and lofty expression imparted to the features shows that the artist caught the religious idea and left it there in imperishable stone. The moulding of the hands, the graceful folds of the vestments, the fine tracery of the stole and chasuble, and the very texture of the cloth have been worked out of the granite by the sculptor's chisel. The pilasters are four in number; the first is 5x9 feet square and 1 foot high; on it is the name Radel in big raised letters. Over this rises a base, 4 feet square, set off with two cornices or brackets, on the sides of which rest two angelic figures, each 5 feet high. The workmanship of these two figures is on a par with the surmounting statue. The next pilaster is supported by four columns of polished granite, showing a niche with highly polished surfaces. This is surmounted by a cap of elegant carving, and above it another pilaster on which rests a paneled die. The carving and tracery on the different pieces are done in an artistic manner, producing a picturesque and beautiful effect.

Some idea of the labor involved in the work may be gathered from the fact that the entire force of Powers & McGowan's employees were kept busy on the monument, statuary, and coping enclosure for one year. The monument is erected on the Radel plot in the Cemetery of the Holy Sepulchre, and cost $12,000.

Mr. John Radel was so well pleased with the entire work that he tendered to Powers & McGowan and their employees a grand supper at the Fairmount Hotel, at which a good time was had and a vote of thanks was given the donor.

The Lackawanna Shovel Brigade.

A noticeable practice kept up for years by the Lackawanna Railroad Company is the clearing of its tracks after every snow-storm. No matter how deep the snow falls, one hour after the storm is over a path has been made inside each track between this city and Hoboken, every laborer in the company's employ being put to work with a snow-shovel. They take off on a scoop's width inside each track, thus making a path about two feet wide. With every section gang at work it takes but a short time to get the tracks in shape, and while the snow is a foot deep all over the country walking would be good on the Lackawanna in a pair of the lightest summer shoes.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quick medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.
